

Workplace Compliance for Employees Program

Reliable, ongoing, and cost-effective compliance training

According to the EEOC, the employer should provide training to all employees to ensure that they understand their rights and responsibilities under the laws prohibiting harassment, violence and workplace privacy. Compliance training is a necessary business expense. In some cases state law requires that all employees be trained on harassment or other compliance issues. An efficient way to administer this training is through on-line training. This medium is a sure way to decrease necessary training expenses while providing quality instruction to your workforce on compliance and company-wide policies and procedures.

Workplace Compliance for Employees - Classes:

Workplace Harassment for Employees

ELT's harassment covers all of the federally protected categories, including race, sex, national origin, religion, disability and age. The module also tackles the subtleties of workplace harassment by drawing from the most recent cases on the subject.

Workplace Violence for Employees

ELT's violence program covers more than just extreme forms of workplace violence, like workplace shootings. It tackles some of the more subtle and pervasive forms of workplace violence, such as threats, cyberstalking, and domestic violence that infiltrate the workplace. The program also addresses violent behavior by both co-workers and third parties.
